

The Kinds of Feelings That Happen On Summer Beaches

Lying in the sand I saw you there, You looked like a stick of gelignite and I wanted to disarm this feeling, but I didn't know which wire to cut,
the red, the green,
the green or the red,

The red, the green,
the green or the read about a kind of surgery that could deal with people like you and me and neutralise the kinds of feelings that happen on summer beaches,

Like love and sex, and sex and love to lie on my nautical towel with you...

Photo: Amelia Handscornb

www.myspace.com/lawrencearabia

James Milne Lawrence Arabia (©2006 Mushroom Music Publishing)

Lawrence Arabia's career thus far has been hamstrung by the tragedy that was the destruction of the famous Pink and White Terraces in 1886, by the cataclysmic volcanic eruption of Mount Tarawera. With the proceeds of all his musical endeavours, he intends to bring the plight of the ancient geothermal attractions to worldwide attention, and kickstart a massive campaign to turn the terraces into a world class freshwater diving attraction by using underwater digging apparatus to remove the metres of ash and other volcanic debris currently covering the terraces.

Prose and Poetry

phantom
billstickers ltd.

13thhead@gmail.com