

A Moment in the Morning

As the Earth rotates its morning greeting towards the sun, and all the stars gently flicker their last light of our beginning day. The crescent slither of the moon, softly reveals its beauty.

Not only a preamble to the direction of our soon to be light of day, but a sliver of a reminder of the night that was, the day it is, and the blessing of each and every moment of each and every turn our Earth has to offer - The morning sky itself sometimes our only glimpse of God throughout the rest of our day, reflects back to us an image of ourselves - a message of sorts; to reveal our best Beauty, the Beauty within, the Beauty that God has graced upon us.

This very day, this very morning, this very moment.

Jeffery D. McCaleb

is 36 years old, has a 2 and a half year old daughter by the name of Grace, is the middle of three boys, has two wonderful parents still married and still living, lives in and was born and raised in Cookeville, Tennessee, loves to write, watch movies, sing and listen to music, ride his motorcycle, and take long naps.

phantom
billstickers ltd.

